County Official Leads Fight for Americanism, Honesty and Fairness

The "Official Condemnation" placards, with their evasive editing of George Creel's remarks about The Tribune have reached Utica, N. Y., the county seat of Oneida County. That enter prising city at once smelled a Hearst, and its business men took immediate steps to place The Tribune on sale despite the assertion made by an employe of the distributer of New York papers that William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, had prohibited its sale.

Pleasure to Aid The Tribune

"It would give us great pleasure to have placards placed in our window stating that The New York Tribune could be found here and also advertise in the local papers that it could be found here until further notice. Of course, we would have to have you send us the papers promptly, maybe 50 or 100 a day, and we would send you our check to cover.

> EUGENE, Ore., Sept. 14.—This community found a use last night for the bundles of Hearst publications that have been piling up unopened at the various newsstands since the first of the month, when "The San Francisco Examiner" adopted the policy of sending papers and magazines, despite the dealers' refusal on patriotic grounds to handle

It was the news that the First American Army was turning the St. Mihiel salient inside out and had reached the frontier of Germany that inspired a crowd of Eugene citizens with the notion of devoting the Hearst publications to a patriotic purpose. From newsstand to newsstand they went, gathering up the bundles of papers, shouldering them like faggots and marching to a publie square.

There oil was poured over the pile and a match touched to it. While the flames leaped up in celebration of the American victory on the other side of the world several hundred Some one struck up "Keep the Home Fires Burning" and the whole crowd

The Tribune's Position

N THE course of a campaign against seditious and disloyal publications, undertaken at the urgent request of the government, The Tribune exposed the disloyalism of the Hearst newspapers in a series of articles entitled "Coiled in the Flag-

W HILE The Tribune was engaged in this work the newsdealers of Greater New York declared war on the Hearst newspapers, for economic and patriotic reasons. All the members of the New York Publishers' Association, except The Tribune, resolved to treat this action on the part of the newsdealers as an illegal boycott and agreed to support Hearst by refusing to sell their papers to any dealer who stopped buying the Hearst papers. This was to say that a newsdealer who for any reason refused to handle Hearst's American or Journal, or who reduced his daily orders for them, could buy no other morning or evening newspape.. The Publishers' Association was afraid that if the newsdealers could overthrow the influence of Hearst they would be strong enough to demand a general reduction in the N VIEW of its fight against the Hearst newspapers, which had led to their being denounced by the National Security League and barred from many communities for patriotic reasons, The Tribune could not stand with Hearst commercially. The Tribune, therefore, acting alone, announced that it would sell to all newsdealers alike, without discrimination, whether they handled Hearst newspapers or not.

I HEREUPON the Publishers' Association, representing (besides the Hearst newspapers) The World, The Times, The Sun, The Herald, the Staats-Zeitung, The Evening Sun, The Evening World, The Evening Telegram, The Mail, The Globe and The Post, decreed that the circulation of The Tribune should be restrained. It notified the American News Company not to deliver The Tribune to anti-Hearst newsdealers. The American News Company is a monopoly and absolutely controls the distribution of morning newspapers in New York. Acting on orders from the Publishers' Association, it refused to deliver The Tribune to newsdealers who either cancelled or reduced their orders for the Hearst newspapers.

ATTHIS point The Tribune was expected to choose between sacrificing its anti-Hearst policy or losing control of its circulation. The Tribune chose instead to fight it out. The first step was to meet the newsdealers' economic problem by reducing the price of papers from $1.40 to $1.20 per hundred. When this was announced the American News Company refused to deliver The Tribune at all to any newsdealer, except at the old price of $1.40 per hundred. Having attempted by its monopolistic power to dictate to whom The Tribune should be sold. this organization proposed now to say at what price it should be

HE TRIBUNE has met this situation by undertaking to organize its own delivery system, a thing so difficult and costly to do that no New York morning newspaper has ever tried it under conditions now existing.

IVI EANWHILE Hearst has invoked the aid of the city administration, through Mayor Hylan, whom the Hearst papers pretend to have elected to office. Licenses of anti-Hearst dealers have been revoked. There have been injunction proceedings in the courts and incipient riots in the streets, all of which the New York newspapers have steadily ignored in their news

HE TRIBUNE has retained Lindley M. Garrison, former Secretary of War, as special counsel to seek the legal redress to which it may be entitled.

NOTE .- Owing to the scarcity of print paper and the rules of conservation now being observed, it is impossible for The Tribune to exceed its paid circulation. Otherwise it would undertake to give this story unlimited circulation in New York from its own presses. The same condition as to paper limits the distribution of pumphlets. Therefore, those who are with us in this fight are requested to give this statement further circulation. Cut it out and mail it to your friends and ask them to remail it to others.
